Connecting the Dots: Using Creative Intelligence to Advance Your Career

Eileen Kohan is the Associate Provost and Executive Director of Continuing Education and Summer Programs (CESP), at the University of Southern California in Los Angeles. Eileen's portfolio includes experience in both corporate and educational settings. As Executive Director of the CESP, Eileen works with deans, senior administrators and trustees to develop lifelong learning programming to support the University strategic plan.

Prior to her appointment in September 2010, Eileen served as the Senior Associate Dean in Student Affairs and Executive Director of the USC Career Planning and Placement Center. Eileen is a lecturer in the USC College, teaching both a freshman seminar and internship course. She developed the first distance learning class offered to undergraduates in the summer of 2000 and the first alumni distance learning career course in 2003.

Eileen was recruited to USC from Columbia University in New York where she directed the Center for Career Services. Eileen has worked with a few of the most admired corporations in America. At AT&T and Verizon, Eileen led marketing and sales organizations and capped her career leading a business unit generating $500 million annually.
